father's side, owned a ranch in Cokeville, Wyoming, where her father was working when she was born. Her grandfather was Herman A. Teichert and her grandmother, Minerva Kolhepp Teichert was a noted western artist.

When Robin was four years old, her family moved to Provo, Utah, where her father became chairman of the campus adult education center at BYU. While living in Provo, Robin attended Joaquin Elementary and Farrer Junior High Schools.

During her eighth grade school year, her family moved to Circleville, Utah, where her father was the Piute High School principal. Athletics, music, leadership and horseback riding made high school a fun and busy time for Robin as she completed her four and one half years in Piute High.

After graduation in 1974, Robin returned to Provo where she studied elementary education and music at BYU.

Dick and Robin met in a religion class and just over a year later, they were married on April 30, 1976, in the Provo Temple. They both continued their studies at BYU during their first year of marriage, then they moved back to Heber Valley so Dick could work with his father building homes.

Since that time, Dick has earned his own contractor's license and he started his own
